INLAND WATER ROUTES HAVE A WAR VALUE

Theodore Justice Says They Would Be Better Than Canal as Means of Defense.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6.—That waterways are of value not only in time of peace but in time of war, and that an inland waterway along the Atlantic coast as a means of national defense would be of even greater value than the Panama canal, is the opinion expressed by Theodore Justice, of Philadelphia, who is commissioner of Fairmount park.

"How many of us realize," said Mr. Justice, "that but for the sinking of the battleship Maine the Panama canal would today not even have been begun? When we were suddenly facing war we found our fleet divided, one part in the Atlantic, the other in the Pacific, and each division liable to being defeated in detail. The long, hazardous trip of the Oregon around Cape Horn was a matter of intense anxiety and aroused the whole nation to the need of the Panama canal as a means of national defense, so that, in case of need, we could unite all our warships in one mighty fleet and in either ocean."

International Aggression.
"In my remarks before the convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in December last, I pointed out that the question whether the Panama canal, which was wholly paid for by the United States and is wholly within United States territory, is to be absolutely within United States control, had seemingly become an international question and had created a situation that was charged with danger, one that might lead to conflict with the whole world united against us, and that this conflict might come upon us as suddenly as did the sinking of the Maine. The danger which existed at that time has been multiplied a hundred fold by the situation that now confronts us in Mexico."

"Under such a peril our greater cities, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and even Washington, the capital of the nation, might be at the mercy of united European fleets, but this danger would be fully averted if the waterways that now connect New York harbor with the Delaware river and Chesapeake bay were deepened sufficiently to allow the passage of torpedo boats. This inland waterway would be safe from battle-ship attack and would have all the advantages of a short inside line from which offensive warfare might be more safely carried on. The benefits indicated for the section from New York to Chesapeake bay would be vastly extended and multiplied with the completion of the entire project, giving a protected waterway the whole length of the Atlantic coast."

The National Value.
"The broad, national value of such a waterway would be far greater to the people of the United States than even that of the Panama canal, conceding, as I do, quite as much for the national value of the latter as is claimed by its most sanguine advocates."

"Will any broad-minded and patriotic citizen of the United States not concede that matters of national defense should have precedence at all times over the many other meritorious projects that have been proposed? All of the latter proposed plans contain great commercial value to the nation, and I hope that within the course of a reasonable time all of them will be developed, but in the interest of the whole nation the greatest project of them all is the immediate preparation for national defense contained within the plans of the Atlantic Deepwaterways Association, extending all the way from Maine to Florida."
